

ABOUT ANNOTATED IMAGE CONTENT STORAGE TRANSFER: IT'S NOT THAT SIMPLE!

(PDF #3 of 3 for LGH Front Page Impromptu Intro)

Much of what I'm doing is show and tell- not just tell. The SHOW and tell, in order to be specific enough, often means personally annotated images from an organization, government entity, IRS (Secretary of State, or Attorney-General's, etc.) or court-connected professional's website. That's cumbersome; it takes a lot of time. Examples below on this home page and you'll find them throughout the blog.

Media (annotated images etc.) on the blog is through "media library" stored there. Media on Twitter is automatically added to my account profile under "Media" (in order of appearance only, i.e., not in an organized fashion) and doesn't automatically transfer here. Other media, I simply keep on the computer (i.e., privately) because it's not fully processed yet. All this takes a huge amount of time and administrative upkeep (i.e., file labeling, folders, etc.). All of this adds time to production, so it's never just about looking it up. It's also about getting it out. In addition – an obstacle that can be overcome; I just have to get to it soon – images or website snapshots taken by cell-phone, as opposed to on laptop, act differently, are harder to annotate and constantly label. I devised a certain system for the computer which has not yet proved easy to transfer to cellphone. It's not a simple matter of just putting it "on the cloud."

This also presents obstacles for individuals seeking to organize any movement. Unlike professionals, we typically do not have access to professional publications media (i.e., cannot afford to have Sage, Wiley, Elsevier or University-based (i.e., Schools of Law/Law Reviews; or American Psychological Association-sponsored publications) which are then indexed and (via semantic software) made available. Unlike many individuals who may function in academia, we are not generally part of inter-university "consortia" on how to address and handle visible issues of "Family Court Matters" and collaborate on what to do about them, citing each other (constantly!) in those publications.

Over time I began paying better attention to the media platforms, including the academic media and who's who on the editorial boards, in reporting on and noticing developments in this field. You'll see it over time in the posts and on Twitter.

(This segment included just to show where it fits on LGH Front Page ("FamilyCourtMatters.org" Sept 4, 2019 updates)

WHO AM I (AND WHO AM I NOT?): LGH Front Page Impromptu 'WHO AM I \(and Who Am I NOT?\) + Why Blog \(1 para. only\) ~~ Screen

Shot 2019-09-04 at 12.35.59 PM copy WHY COMMON ANALYSIS? LGH FRONT PAGE Impromtu 'Why Uncommon Analysis?' \(Screen